

Christopher King

Trainee Patent Attorney

Before joining J A Kemp, Chris studied for a Master's degree in Mechanical Engineering, gaining knowledge of a wide range of areas including fluid mechanics, materials science, manufacturing, and biomedical devices. During his time at university, he conducted research into the optimisation of alternative wind turbine designs using computational fluid dynamics (CFD) and genetic algorithms. His final year project involved investigation into the effect of oxide layer composition on the fretting-fatigue corrosion of nickel-titanium alloys used in cardiovascular implants.

Chris joined the firm in 2021 and is based in our London office.
